"There's just something about the magical bond that exists between a cowboy and his horse that drove us throughout the song writing process. This song means a lot to the both of us because we know just what that feels like. Long hours in the saddle and long days on the prairie aren't foreign to us - they're our normal, and we wanted to reflect those sentiments in that song," says Connor Adams.

West of The Fourth is a band that seeks to span both traditional and contemporary themes through their music. Their songs are compelling and passionate, filled with interesting stories told from the saddle, along with heartfelt tales that truly exemplify just what it means to be a cowboy. With a sound that bridges the gap between contemporary country music, country waltzes, and country rock, West of The Fourth brings a unique and interesting sound to listeners from all around North America.

With the release of this single, the band is looking to expand their presence on an international level. A planned breakout post-COVID, West of The Fourth is looking forward to bringing this unique sound to places far and wide, where the lore of the North American cowboy continues to live on.
