Developmental Disabilities Awareness Month

In 1987, then President Ronald Reagan, issued a public proclamation recognizing March as Developmental Disabilities Awareness Month. Since then, every March, campaigns are held that seek to raise awareness about the inclusion of people with developmental disabilities in all areas of community life, as well as working to remove barriers that people with disabilities still sometimes face in connecting to their communities.

This year, a celebration was held in the Montana Capitol Rotunda, attended by Governor Greg Gianforte, Department of Public Health and Human Services (DPHHS) Director Charlie Brereton, Representative Bob Keenan, and several other key stakeholders. The governor also signed a proclamation declaring the month of March to be Developmental Disabilities Awareness Month in Montana.

“Montanans with intellectual and developmental disabilities are a key part of our communities,” Governor Gianforte said. “Over the past few years, we’ve made historic investments to support individuals with disabilities. While we continue to find new ways to support them, we should also recognize and celebrate the progress we’ve made.”

Provider agencies, such as Spring Meadow Resources, have been working for years, in conjunction with other committed stakeholders, to increase opportunities for people with disabilities. We will continue to bring awareness of the important work we do on behalf of Montanans with Intellectual and Developmental Disabilities and continue to raise awareness of the contributions that we make to our community as a whole.
