The timely debriefing and encouraging words from President Biden culminated USBC’s annual National Conference held in Washington D.C. from July 19 – 21.

“I was honored to be at the White House as part of a delegation from the Board of Directors for the U.S. Black Chambers led by USBC President and CEO Ron Busby Sr., and to represent the state of Indiana,” said McCoy.

In a surprise visit with the group, President Biden thanked McCoy and all USBC members for their continued partnership and emphasized “there is still work to be done to ensure equitable growth and wealth creation for communities of color (see White House release here).”

“It was a first wonderful opportunity to have access to the White House to share the message of the U.S. Black Chambers with the administration as we continue to fight for equity and access,” McCoy said.

The White House Office of Public Engagement and National Economic Council hosted the group. The purpose of the visit was to expand economic access and opportunity for Black communities.

“I am very proud to be a Board of Directors Member of the U.S. Black Chambers since our missions are so closely aligned,” McCoy said. “This is a great opportunity to work directly with Washington, DC officials and policymakers for the betterment of historically disadvantaged Black business all across America.”
