

Marshai Aulton

Bio

Marshai Aulton is a young woman who resides within the state of New Jersey. She is a college graduate of Temple University, where she obtained a Bachelor's degree in Organizational Leadership. Presently, she is on the path to obtaining her Masters of Divinity Degree through Liberty University with a concentration in Pastoral Counseling. She currently works as a Life Skills Coach for CUA Bethanna where she encourages, counsels and assists youth and young adults with future planning who are in the foster care system. She creates workshops and individualized plans to improve outcomes for them to become successful adults.

During her free time, she enjoys researching, strategic planning, learning new things, listening to music, writing, reading, sitting on the beach, traveling to new places, and attending women's and leadership conferences.

She is passionate about seeing this next generation walk in their full potential and purpose that God has for them, in spite of the tragedies, disappointments, and hurts they have experienced in their lives. For we all have a story. As she overcomes her own challenges daily, she transparently lives her life as a walking testimony to show others that they are stronger than they think, they are warriors, and that God's love for them is everlasting. She is an advocate for women becoming whole, understanding their worth and value, maximizing their full potential, and knowing that every day they wake up and their feet touch the floor, is another opportunity to be victorious.
