

Originally from Sierra Leone, Ethleen Sawyerr came to the US with her family after a civil war broke out in her home country. She has been afforded the privilege of teaching editing, reading, speaking, and writing skills—formally and informally—to individuals and groups from all over the world for more than ten years. Her clients come from Colombia, France, Myanmar, South Korea, Turkey, and many more countries. Ethleen is a published writer, and sought-after editor of manuscripts, blogs, small business websites, essays, and more. She holds a master's degree from Eastern University and a bachelor's degree from Howard University. Ethleen loves studying languages; she speaks Krio, English, and French.